The canvas becomes an instrument.

This is a musical-pictorial performance. Music and painting are intimately linked by physical microphones and sensors placed behind the canvas. The canvas becomes an instrument.

While painting, the artist rubs and slap on the canvas. The sounds generated by this new way of painting are transmitted to the sound designer. He tweaks, module and sequence them to build a complex and rich musical score.

The painter does more than paint, he "plays" the canvas. The sound designer does more than playing, he composes the canvas directly influencing the painter. Then creates a feedback loop between the 2 players.

«As each stroke of crayon or brush is recorded, Frédéric, a sound designer, transforms the vibrations of Alec's brush and crayon strokes into dark, weird, and beautiful techno-based sounds.» — Patrick O'Keefe - DEVISE magazine - Berlin

«The final result was a complete melding of a live painting session and an audio-visual immersion. Truly inspirational.» — Shawn Katz - ROVER magazine - Montreal
